TOOBIN'

THE MAJOR COIN-OP HIT OF THE YEAR!

Catch the action with Toobin' — the world's first inner-tube race! Join Biff and Jet the tube-dudes as they cruise the world's roughest rivers. Check out the rapids, stay one jump ahead of the crocs and arm yourself with tin cans to biff any creeps that get in the way.

Paddle down river avoiding logs and branches that'll pop your tube. Watch out for swamp monsters and fishermen, and swish through checkpoint gates for mega points.

It's crazy fun all the way to the hazards of the white-water challenges. So grab your joystick and get paddling with the rad-lads if you want a taste of the action.

Toobin' — the coolest game on the streets today!

The Game:

Toobin' — The first game of its kind. Join Biff and Jet, the tube-dudes, as they cruise the baddest rivers in and out of this world!

Getting Started:

A game for one or two, play either Biff or Jet in search of the most outrageous party they can find. Guide the tube-dudes to places even your travel agent doesn't know about!

Each river contains new and exciting backdrops to the varied obstacles that you must negotiate. Pick up tin cans that you'll find in the rivers to defend yourself against the shoreside creeps like punks, fly fishermen, swamp monsters and even kamikaze penguins. Watch out for sticks, branches and spiked logs that can easily burst your tube.

Paddle through the gates for mega-bonuses, but don't bump the poles or you'll halve your score. Hot toobers can rack up the points this way. Don't lag behind 'cos the big gator is just waiting to catch those slow toobers at the back. Hold tight as you challenge the white water rapids.

Toobin's got lots of special features like simultaneous two player action for double the fun, and higher levels with wild and varied rivers from the Amazon to Mars!, taking in the Nile and the Colorado along the way. Complete the rivers and you can join in the partying!

STAMPEDE SEPTEMBER

Dear Stampeder,

Thank you for being part of the magazine of the future. If you've been with us from the start you'll already have quite a good software collection, as well as having the latest news on games, the tutorials, the productivity reviews, games reviews and P.D. You'll also have been able to see and play the latest game preview demos. A recent one, Ocean's Ivanhoe, re-entered the Gallup Top 20 charts after being on Stampede, so I'm sure that many of you found it too irresistible to have only as a demo.

If you are a new Stampeder you won't have noticed the mag getting better and better, but in forthcoming months we hope you will. Being a totally new and radical magazine it takes time to settle down and become established, but we're happy that we're giving you enough of what you want, even though it's still early days.

MICRO PROSE

When Duncan Evans phoned in and said he was visiting Tetbury, I asked "Isn't that where Microprose come from". His answer was simply "Yes".

Duncan Evans

I don't know about you, but I've always wondered what the name Microprose was supposed to mean. What message about the company was it supposed to conjure up? On a recent trip up to the country retreat of Microprose in deepest Tetbury, I asked them why they worked for a company whose name meant 'very small writing.'

For some reason no one could answer that one, but they did show me the latest games under development, as well as kindly treating me to a rather splendid lunch. Not that I'd let that influence what I write of course!

However, Rick Dangerous II is looking particularly good as it heads towards an October release. Five huge levels can be tackled in any order, though you have to complete the first four before you are allowed to attempt the fifth. It all starts as Rick, now kitted out Flash Gordon style with a blonde quiff makes his way to Hyde Park to board an alien spaceship. Having hotwired it he travels off to the planet Barf just in time to hear the fat man (who was in the comic that came with the original game) declare his intention to lead the Robot Starship Force on an invasion of the Earth. Ricks objective is to travel through the five levels, which include the ice kingdoms of Freezia, the forests of Vegetabilia, the mud mines under Barfalatropolis Citadel and the Robot Starship Force Control Centre, and set the planet on a collision course with the sun, immobilise robot forces on Earth and find some way of getting home. Easy or what.

The graphics, especially for the ice kingdom, look pretty tasty, and there are traps, pits and tricks galore. You're going to lose a lot of lives and spend a long time playing this one I can assure you. Even playing with infinite lives I still found it hard going. Cheat modes and maps are going to be essential I think.

At the other end of the spectrum Universal Military Simulator II is also nearing completion. If you like big sprawling, worldwide strategy games, then this is the one for you. You can have up to 16,000 units per side (imagine how long it'll take to move them all!), with up to 127 human or computer players (World War II sim here we come), controlling 525 provinces and up to a total of 32,000 individual units scattered across the world. If that sounds impressive, some of the features I saw demonstrated are gob smacking. Like weather influences. Every little square section of the world has its own weather rating. You can overlay temperatures and wind directions and strengths over the map while calling up terrain factors and printing towns, roads and troops. It look like a giant mess if you have it all at once but it illustrates just how much data is packed into the game. The down side of this is that it isn't particularly quick. drawing the map, and the map graphics themselves are atrocious. I pointed this out at the time and got the reply back that it would have been too complex to have made them any better. Complete rubbish of course. The graphics could easily have been made a damn sight better than they are. Ah well, its the gameplay that counts the most, and that looks like being exemplary. It's coming out this month at a penny under thirty quid. It also only runs on a 1040ST at the moment, but 'Prose is desperately trying to crush it down to fit in a standard 512k ST. From the wonderful to the weird, and to Fireball. Imagine a large covered stadium, with eight goalmouths (four per team) scattered around it. Then imagine that you have two players from a squad of eight who are inside a small dome. You can't see anything outside the energy dome, but you have a radar showing a plan of the immediate area so you can locate the goalmouths. The player who has control of the fireball (literally a ball of semi-molten lead) also has control of the dome, which moves around corresponding to his players moves. The object is simple, find your opponents goalmouths, lock the dome on to it, then wait for a salamander to come out the goalmouth. All you have to do is jump up in the air, avoid the salamanders death inducing breath, and torch the mother with the fireball. Easy enough, except the fireball causes your armour to heat up while carrying it, and unless you pass in time, boooom! Scratch one player.

"I asked them why they worked for a company whose name meant very small writing."

UMS II is World War about to break out?

Fireball. Boy is it hot!

SIMULCRA by Graftgold, it's reviewed in this issue.

There are also little bonus markers around that improve performance and give you the ability to kill the opposing team players. It's all very strange, and with a sub game involving blasting away at a demon, very violent. The graphics for the playing area aren't great by any stretch of the imagination, but it moves quickly enough and there's plenty of nervous tension. Fireball is out this month, for £24.95, so you can see for yourself what it's like. Simulcra (August release) and International Soccer Challenge (Autumn release) were also on show, with the former looking like something special. In fact I've reviewed both of these so check out the games review section to get the full low down. I also came away with the long awaited F-19 Stealth Fighter, which has a really glossy manual, keyboard overlay and comes on three discs. Thankfully it supports additional disk drives if you have them fitted. There's sampled sound effects and speech, over 4000 different missions, four regions to fly and bomb (Libya, Persian Gulf, Central Europe and the Northern Cape), and a choice of flying the F-19 Stealth Fighter or the recently unveiled F117A. It may be £29.99 but if you're really into flight sims this looks like being a wicked package. Betrayal will be the next game on the Rainbird label after UMS II, which could be the biz for strategy freaks. Set in medieval times you have to depose kings and bishops, set up your own puppet rulers, while conquering towns, raising arms, looking after finances and indulging in government style political subterfuge. Economic, military and political elements all have to be mastered if you want to come out on top, and not out of the back door in a rubbish cart with a knife in your back. Betrayal will set you back a rather stiff £29.99 and be released towards the end of August. I also had a look at the PC version of Silent Service II which was fabby, but you'll have to wait ages for the ST conversion of that one. So there you are, start saving now 'cos Microprose has a lot of product coming out in the next two months. And some of it's pretty good too.

Reviewed in this issue, also — the spectacular International Soccer Challenge.Has been available for some time and was reviewed in issue 3, F-19 Stealth Fighter
